

*A Prince-Charming
Romance of Business
Girl Life in Gotham.*

ANALYSIS OF PRECEDING CHAPTERS.—Hilda Giechert, stenographer in a law office, is loved by Hyde Clayton, junior member of the firm. She is a very attractive girl, and the clerk. Clayton believes that Hilda's love for him is the only thing that will bring him good fortune. This estate cannot be found, although Hilda is sure that she believes it must be a clue to its whereabouts. Bruce Clayton, Hilda's father, is a very wealthy man. Muriel Stange, to whom Clayton is engaged, overhears Clayton's proposition to marry Hilda. She is a very beautiful girl, and she knows of certain things he has committed to renewing his promise to her to marry her. Bruce hits on a clue to Hyde Clayton means time was in his private office nervously pacing to and fro. He rang his bell impatiently. "Send Raynor here," he ordered as an office boy appeared. A moment later a lean, sharp-faced man with sandy hair and shifty, red-rimmed eyes stumbled in. "Shut the door," said Clayton, "I want to talk to you."

Without ceasing his rapid walk

FOR ten minutes Jack Bruce worked eagerly on the cipher, striking an occasional letter on the typewriter as he did so. At length he compared the results with the original cipher, and a smile of genuine delight crossed his joyous face.

"It may mean a fortune to her!" he said to himself. Joyously. But a cloud darkened momentarily the sunny look on his bright face.

"It may be rich, that puts me forever out of my reach. I, a poor clerk, with no sure future, could never dare to ask a woman of wealth to share my lot. There will be enough fortune-hunters after her money without my unwelcome the number."

Then, with an impatient shake of the head, he fought back his selfish longings and resolved to think of nothing but the happiness and welfare of the girl to whom he might be about to reveal the fortune that was rightfully hers.

"But it will be hard!" he murmured as he bent again to his task. "Hard to abandon the quest for her hand just when I seem to be winning her liking and confidence. And oh, how dreary this old office will be when she is gone!"

to manage them in such a way that yours is the only name which will appear if they're ever found out. When I first ran across you down at Whelan, where you were on trial for housebreaking, you seemed to me just the sort of man I needed for my purpose. I got you acquainted but I got poor later of sheets that would send you to Sing Sing for a job here because you might be useful to me."

"Well," growled Raynor, "I have been useful, ain't I? No one can say I haven't made good. What's the use of going over all that old story again?"

"Just to refresh your memory, Ezra, because—"

"Because you've got some more dirty work for me, eh? Well, what is it?"

"Ezra," my friend," said Clayton, leaning in his stride and looking coldly into the shifty eyes, "I don't like your tone, you forget your place. Don't force me to give you too sharp a reminder of it and don't presume too much on your past services."

"Oh, I meant no offense," replied Raynor in a less gruff tone. "But it ain't any fun to have old scores raked up all the time. What can I do for

A White China Silk Gift.

Dear Miss Judy:

I have a yard of white china silk left from a summer dress. Can I use it to make a Christmas present? If so, please tell me how and what to make.

A FRIEND.

THE daintiest and prettiest bag for holding handkerchiefs is made of white China silk. Cut a round piece of cardboard eight inches in diameter, cover this with cotton wadding and plenty of sachet powder, and then with white silk on both sides. Cut two widths of the silk eighteen inches long, mas offering. She has almost everything, so I can't buy a gift. Can you suggest something out of the ordinary?

ANXIOTS.

A SHIRT waist coffer will not go amiss and is something out of the ordinary as a Christmas offering. It is made from a rather flat broad cardboard box. Flowered cretonne, silk or dotted swiss over blue or pink can be used as a cover and the bottom is lined with quilted satin containing the sachet powder. The corners of the box are made firm by boring holes in the covered cardboard and tying ribbons through. Ribbons are also arranged in the bottom to hold the waist in place and tie the box. A large bow on the top with the initials is a pretty feature. This box is certainly a comfort for the one best waist.

Concerning the accusation of "clipping," I will say that as St. Louisian on a visit here, with a view of locating permanently, I find this pernicious habit of "clipping" a downright bugbear, as its grating influences have reached every branch of trade. On arriving here I was greatly impressed with what appeared to be the extreme conscientiousness of the waiters, salespeople, guides, &c. In some instances their attentions and obeisance were downright embarrassing, so intense were they. However, I soon learned they were belittling the matter with the remark that, when I inquired for the possible chance of earning a measly 10-cent tip. "Why don't you ask the Gilchrist girl for it then?"

"I did, but she wouldn't give it to me. She said I'd spoken disrespectfully of old March, or some such nonsense, and that I shouldn't read his last letter to her. Now I saw her looking at that letter to-day, so I know she's got it here at the office. Probably keeps it in her

"But how about getting her consent?"

"It's just possible she may not be sensible enough to see what a fine catch I am."

"It can be arranged. Listen."

And he leaned forward whispering excitedly in the other's ear.

"Say," drawled Raynor, as Clayton leaned back, "you're a wonder, you are. Make it $2,000 and a raise of pay and I'll do it."

"In whatever way it turns out I thank you with all my heart Mr. Bruce for the trouble you've taken and for your sympathy. Please believe that," said Hilda earnestly as they stood awaiting the return trip of the elevator.

"No, it's not quite all. There's one thing more. Ezra, single life isn't pleasant."

"It's good enough for me. No wife for mine."

"Oh, yes, I think so, Ezra. How would you like to get married?"

"Married? Me?" gasped Raynor in scornful amusement.

"To a charming girl. I'd give you a wedding present of $1,000."

"Who's the 'charming girl'?"

"Muriel Stange. And—"

"Murder! I'd sooner marry a wild cat. Make it a million-dollar wedding present and maybe I'll consent, but not for less. Muriel Stange? Ugh!"

"She is better than a term in Sing Sing," said Clayton gently.

"Eh? I'm not so sure of that. I'll have to think it over. What's the idea? Why are you taking all this interest in my marrying? I used to think it was you that was stuck on the Stange girl. Is it a case of getting tired of her and trying to palm her off on me?"

"No," replied Clayton; "I'm not tired of her for I never cared for her. She caught me in a piece of crooked business with one of the estates we have in charge of. To keep her mouth shut I promised to marry her. That's all there ever was between us. But now I've Hilda Gleichrist was leaving the office that evening with Adele, with whom she lived, when at the elevator Jack Bruce intercepted her.

"Pardon me," he said to Adele, then, turning to Hilda, he went on in ill-suppressed eagerness:

"I think I've made a discovery that may throw some light on that cipher. Have you time to hear about it now?"

"Indeed I have!" cried Hilda.

"We'll have to go back to the stenographer's room," said Jack, "because it's necessary to have a typewriter at hand on which to explain my theory."

A black and white line drawing of a woman in a long, flowing dress with a wide, patterned collar and puffed sleeves. She is surrounded by various accessories: a small hat with a veil, a long necklace, a small bag, and several pieces of clothing including a long coat and a short-sleeved dress.

THE doll's gown combines a shirred waist with a shirred skirt and can be made high or low neck as preferred, and with or without the circular bertha. The coat is loose and ample, with wide bell sleeves and is turned back to form revers. The hood is made with a full, soft crown and a plain brim that is shaped to form points about the face. Beneath the chin are soft ties terminating in shirring. Material for medium size (18 inches) is for gown 1 yard 21, 1 yard 31 or 34 1/2 inches wide, with 1/2 yard of all-over lace; for coat 1 yard 21 or 1-1/2 yard 44 inches wide, with 1/2 yard of all-over lace; for hood 1/2 yard 21 inches wide. Pattern 4,563, in sizes for dolls of 14, 15 and 16 inches in length, including the head, will be mailed for 10 cents. Send money to "Cashier, The World, Pulitzer Building, New York City."

look that accompanied them and the heartfelt tones of his voice moved her strongly. After one glance into his earnest young face, her heart lurk back, covered the belated secret that had leaped into her eyes at sound of his ardent words. A flush mantled her face and she turned away to hide it.

"Here comes our elevator," she said, carelessly, as the great car sank with a soft thud to the ground, floor and the brass gate slid clicking.

The two stood aside to allow the crowd of tired home-goers to pour out into the street, there to be swallowed up by the mammoth sea of humanity that surged up town along both sides of Broadway.

Then, as Bruce entered the elevator and was whirled upward through the skyscraper to the floor occupied by the "spigars" in the tower of the Glass Tower, they walked through the deserted towers toward that in which Hilda's desk stood.

As they reached the doorway of this last room, Hilda started back with a slight gasp. Bruce stepped quickly and silently past her into the room to see the cause of her alarm.

Hilda's desk, the farther end of the apartment. By the dim light from a solitary gas jet, a man, clad in hand, could be seen leaning over the desk, trying to unscrew the padlock on one of its drawers.

"His back was toward them, but, as Bruce stepped forward, the thief gripped his chisel as a weapon, whirled round to face him.

The cipher in question is not the one given in the first instalment, but is longer and appears in the eighth chapter. In other chapters besides that which contains the cipher, there are many words to be scattered. So it is necessary for the reader to follow the entire story.

There are many ciphers in existence, but the one which competitors are here shown consists of the using of figures for letters. Four words will be given as a start in the key, and the other letters of the alphabet not found in these words will follow.
